International Political Economy Learning Goals

International Political Economy students must understand the intersection between international politics and economics. They will learn about the effects of politics on economic policy at the state, national, and international levels. Students will be exposed to a multidisciplinary curriculum that allows them to analyze their findings through a theoretical approach.

Learning Objectives:

1. Students will be able to understand how international and domestic political influences shape economic factors;
2. Analyze situations where political and economic outcomes are intertwined;
3. Understand the impact of trade, finance and security;
4. Develop skills to evaluate political interactions of states; and
5. Apply quantitative and qualitative tools to analyze political economy.