THE PAUL H. NITZE School of Advanced International Studies (SAIS) of The Johns Hopkins University in Washington, D.C., is one of the world’s leading graduate schools devoted to the study of international relations. In addition to its campus in Washington’s Dupont Circle neighborhood, SAIS has two centers abroad—one in Bologna, Italy, and the other with Nanjing University in Nanjing, China. SAIS enrolls about 1,000 students at its three campuses. SAIS’s primary degree is a two-year M.A. program, known for its interdisciplinary course work in international relations, functional or regional studies, economics and languages. A one-year course of study leading to the Master of International Public Policy degree serves mid-career professionals in government and business. The school accepts a small number of candidates in the Ph.D. program. SAIS also conducts dual-degree programs with prominent universities in the United States and around the globe. Alumni are employed in a wide range of careers throughout the world, and more than 150 graduates have become ambassadors. The school consistently ranks as one of the top master’s degree programs for those pursuing a policy career in international relations in the poll regularly reported by Foreign Policy magazine.
Research Centers at SAIS

SAIS SERVES AS A NEXUS of scholarship in international relations. The mission of its Foreign Policy Institute and more than a dozen other research centers is to discover new knowledge and further the understanding of contemporary world issues. Focusing on such areas as transatlantic relations, energy and environment, human trafficking and East Asian studies, the centers draw on the expertise of the school’s respected faculty and attract prominent visiting scholars. By generating research, publications and seminars, the centers offer insights on cutting-edge developments in global affairs.

One of SAIS’s newest centers is the Bologna Institute for Policy Research, which conducts problem-oriented, interdisciplinary research in international policy. The Bologna Center-based institute seeks to make a positive contribution to policy debates in Europe by promoting and disseminating the scholarship of the wider Johns Hopkins community.

For more information about the research centers at SAIS, visit www.sais-jhu.edu/centers.
Opportunities for the Media: International Reporting Project

THE INTERNATIONAL REPORTING PROJECT at SAIS provides opportunities for U.S. journalists to study, travel and report on important international news stories. The project was established in 1998 and offers fellowships to early-career and mid-career U.S. journalists. IRP Fellows come to SAIS for seminars and classes before embarking on five-week reporting assignments overseas, followed by a final return stay at SAIS. The project also awards Gatekeeper Editor Fellowships each year to senior editors and producers at U.S. news organizations who participate in fact-finding trips to countries in the news. In addition, IRP sponsors panel discussions and seminars on global media issues and organizes periodic conferences on international news coverage. Director of the project is John Schidlovsky (see page 100), a veteran journalist who previously served as director of The Freedom Forum Asian Center in Hong Kong and was a reporter for 20 years, including stints as bureau chief for The Baltimore Sun in Beijing and New Delhi. More information about the International Reporting Project at SAIS is available at www.internationalreportingproject.org.
Using the Experts Guide

THIS PUBLICATION IS DESIGNED as a “who’s who” guide to SAIS resident faculty and other scholars. The guide presents our experts’ specializations by both geographic area and issue. The list is by no means all-inclusive, but suggests the scope of resources that SAIS offers to reporters and news organizations. A profile summarizes each scholar’s areas of expertise, background and education, publications and ability to conduct interviews in a foreign language. In addition to resident faculty and scholars, approximately 150 adjunct and visiting professors teach at SAIS; they are drawn from government, research centers, international agencies and other universities (see page 118). We hope the guide will be helpful and that you will call on the SAIS community for comment or background information.
