Edmund Malesky is a noted specialist in economic development, authoritarian institutions and comparative political economy in Vietnam. In 2012, Malesky received a medal from the Vietnam Chamber of Commerce and Industry for his role in promoting economic development for the United States Agency for International Development’s Vietnam Provincial Competitiveness Index; in 2013, he was appointed by US President Obama to serve on the board of the Vietnam Education Foundation. He has published extensively in leading political science and economic journals and is a recipient of various awards including the Harvard Academy Fellowship and the Rockefeller Bellagio Residency Fellowship. His two most recent books are China's Governance Puzzle: Enabling Transparency and Participation in a Single-Party State (co-authored in 2017 with Jonathan Stromseth and Dimitar Gueorguiev) and Incentives to Pander: How Politicians Use Corporate Welfare for Political Gain (co-authored in 2018 with Nate Jensen).
