Jonathan Kirshner is a Professor of Government at Cornell University. His primary field is International Relations, and a second principal area is Political Economy (especially Macroeconomics). He also conducts research related to politics and film. He is currently pursuing projects on Classical Realism, the international political implications of the financial crisis, and the politics of the ‘seventies film’.

Professor Kirshner is currently director of Cornell University’s Reppy Institute for Peace and Conflict Studies, and is founding co-editor (with Eric Helleiner) of the multi-disciplinary book series, “Cornell Studies in Money.”
